Rochester students want Student Senate position

By DALE KURSCHNER
News Editor

The distance between Winona State and its branch in Rochester may be decreased soon of students in Winona support their peers in Rochester.

Student Senate in Winona last Wednesday voted to add a referendum to senate election ballots tomorrow which would ask voters, "Should an additional Senate position be added for the purpose of filling it with a student from the Winona State Rochester Center?"

"Students want to get organized over there and hopefully we can help them and get them into our organization," Student Senate President Mary Hermesen said.

Fourteen students and seven faculty members at the Rochester Center April 18 signed a letter attached to a set of student government by-laws and sent it to Winona State. The letter and by-laws told Student Senate that students in Rochester were planning to elect a senator from their student body May 15 and 16.

Currently students at Rochester are not represented directly by Student Senate.

"We want to be tied in with the Senate in Winona with our own student senator who would have

Financially hard-hit farm kids may get a break from bill

By TRACY KLOVENS
and DALE KURSCHNER
Staff Reporters

A bill passed by the Minnesota House appropriations committee last week could help farm students if all goes as planned.

Currently, the assets of a student's parent or parents is combined with that parent's income to equate the total parental contribution in financial aid programs.

The parental contribution limit bill would change that procedure so that financial aid programs would only look at the student's family income, rather than its assets, if his family had a rural farmer business debt to asset ratio of .5 or greater.

"If the assets are high and the debts are high, no aid is usually given," said Rep. Dave Grunes, IR, who authored the bill.

"Assets may be high but the debts may dominate over the assets," Grunes said. Because of that, students who have families with large farm assets, but large farm debts, are being pinched out of financial aid.

Grunes said he wants the government to look at the income, rather than just the assets.

Earlier this year, students at Winona State had a chance to tell legislators about how hard it is getting to be for them to afford an education.

One of the most common points brought up to these legislators was that of farm assets.

"We see a great deal of evidence that students from farm families or small business families are treated unfairly," said Student Senate President Mary Hermesen.

"We inherited my grandmother's farm when she died, but they failed to look at the debts that accompanied it," Student Senator Jeff Peterson said.

Candidates debate issues, set goals

By SUSAN LeTOURNEAU
Staff Reporter

Students who may have been indecisive about the 1985-86 Student Senate candidate officer positions could have reached a decision by attending the debate held in the Smog last Thursday noon.

The debate, which included candidates for treasurer, vice-president, and president, began with an introduction from Student Senate President Mary Hermesen.

The first candidates to speak were Tim Knutson and Jeff Krause, both running for the position of treasurer. Both candidates addressed the issue of the student activity fee. "How many of you spend $195 a year without knowing where it's going or why it's going there?" asked Knutson.

Knutson, a junior accounting major, stated that one of his main goals as treasurer would be to keep the students informed of where their money is going as well as to get input from the students as to how they would like their money spent.

His opponent, Krause, has been the treasurer for the past year and stated, "My reasons for running are varied, the main one being continuity." If re-elected, Krause wants to "work out problems associated with the long-range reserve fund which is set aside for extra-curricular activities," as well as to allow the students to have more of a say in the activity fee.

Following a question period directed at the treasurer candidates, the vice-president candidates were introduced and given three minutes each to tell about themselves.

First speaking was Tim Odell, a junior accounting major. "I don't feel that my lack of experience should be a major issue," said Odell. "I have the intelligence."

One of Odell's main goals if elected would be to get more students involved in the Student Senate. "There are issues involving 5,000 students being decided by seven students. I don't think that's fair," said Odell.

The next candidate to speak was Tom "Flash" Ruesink. As

Student arrested, in jail four days

By DALE KURSCHNER
News Editor

It really pays to open and read your mail, or at least it does for Paul Fleming, a sophomore at Winona State.

A member of ROTC and the Student Senate, Fleming was arrested last Wednesday afternoon and placed in jail for nearly five days for failing to abide a court order sent to him through the mail.

That court order was drafted to bring Fleming into court where he was to explain why he hadn't worked off 23 hours or paid $30 in restitution he was ordered to on Feb. 4 from a previous offense.

Last spring, Fleming hit another Winona State student at the Showhouse Saloon, he said, because the student "provoked me." That incident brought on the work hours and the fine.

As for not showing up in court last Monday, as ordered to, Fleming told the court 9 a.m. last Friday (39 hours after being taken into custody) that he had been home for a week visiting his sick father and hadn't had time to read his mail.

Judge Dennis Challeen, however, didn't seem to care much for Fleming's excuse as he asked him "What could you do for him, are you a doctor?" and then sent him back to jail for the weekend.

Fleming said the next day that he didn't think it was fair that Challeen "makes fun of people in the middle of the court," and that Challeen "didn't listen to what I had to say."

"I think Challeen has no regard for family problems or the military services," Fleming said.

At his Friday appearance, Fleming asked to be released because of ROTC's field training exercises Saturday and Sunday. "It has a lot to do with me going to camp this summer."

"They said I couldn't get out

10 students seek to learn about Senate

Editor's Note: This is the last in a three-part series on Senate candidates.

By GREG ABBOTT
Winonan Editor

With only three incumbent senators running for six sophomore senator positions, at least three new faces will be trying to gain experience on Winona State's Student Senate.

Most of the candidates want to learn about the Senate and get other students involved. Elections will be Thursday in Kryzsko Commons Smog and Cafeteria.

Sophomore Student Senator Candidates

Steve Bissen, a freshman mass communications-broadcasting major, is an incumbent senator who serves on the Public Relations Committee. He said that "next year will be an important year for the Senate and I want to be part of it." He is active at KQAL-FM and is a member of AERho, a broadcasting club.

Kelly Hoeft, a freshman paralegal major, is an incumbent senator who serves on the Student Activity Fee Committee. She said she wants to "represent student interests, concerns and ideas to better Winona State."

Lauren Benshoff, a sophomore paralegal major, is an incumbent senator who serves on the Legislative Affairs Committee.

She "has an interest in government and wants to learn how the university operates."

Kurt Johnson, a freshman paralegal major, said he "wants to work with another branch of student involvement." He is a peer minister for United Campus Ministry and is a member of the Students for Social Responsibility and SAM, a business club.

Jackie Fuller, a freshman mass communications-public relations and broadcast major, wants to be on Senate to "have more input on university decisions."

Ron Halter, a freshman political science major, said he "wants more involvement in student affairs."

Bunny Webber, a freshman broadcast and theater major, said "students should be more involved in student government." She is a member of the Wenonah Players and is active at KQAL-FM.

Kimberly Thomas, a sophomore paralegal major, wants to "learn how the Student Senate runs and help out by using her paralegal experience."

Chris Shiakallis, a freshman pre-law and English major, said she wants to "do a lot for Winona State by being part of the Student Senate." She is a member of PALS and the J-board.

Barb Brasket, a freshman, said she "wants to be more involved at Winona State."

President candidates use various strategies

Editor's Note: This is the last in a three-part series examining Senate officer elections.

By GREG ABBOTT
Winonan Editor

The Student Senate presidential race has been full of surprises and differing strategies this year. Candidates with three years of experience are battling another candidate with no Senate experience.

And a full-force campaign by one candidate is being countered with a strategy of a quiet, passive campaign from the other two candidates.

Elections for Student Senate officers will be Thursday in the Kryzsko Commons Smog and Cafeteria.

Kail Christensen

After two tries for the Student Senate president position, Kail Christensen has entered again, using a different campaign strategy the third time around.

"Before I've run hard, aggressive campaigns with lots of posters and signs, but this year I'm going to try something different—a more passive campaign stressing one-on-one contact with the students instead of posters," said Christensen.

He has been involved in the Student Senate for three years serving on the Winona State Mission Statement Committee, Student Activity Fund Committee, MSUSA Fall Conference Delegate, Search Committee for Dean of Science and Technology and Grievance Board.

In past years he has also served as chairman of the Legislative Affairs Committee, MSUSA Fall Conference delegate, the Strategic Planning Committee, was acting vice president, and served on several other committees.

At a televised debate, Christensen acknowledged his long list of experience would be a plus for him, but said experience is not everything.

"Sometimes a person new to

the Senate will have fresh ideas and can be quite effective," said Christensen.

Responding to accusations that the Senate is not in touch with the "common student" Christensen said he felt the accusations were unfounded. He said he felt the Senate did a good job keeping in touch with students, and he hopes to improve student contact further.

"My major goal is to get the student population involved at the grass roots level in the fight to lower tuition and housing rates, fight against the drinking age and removing apathy from campus," said Christensen.

He has tried to get an off-campus polling place for students and has said the current voting place in the Smog and Cafeteria are "skewed" because it gives an unfair advantage to candidates on campus.

He cited last year's election figures which show nearly 80 percent of the voters were on-campus. He said this gives an unfair advantage to Mike Ericson, a presidential candidate who is on campus. Christensen is proposing a polling place off-campus to help increase the voting power of people who have left campus since nearly two-thirds of the students live off-campus.

He also said he would try to solve bad feelings with Rochester Winona State students who feel they don't have a say in how things are done at Winona State.

"It was a problem when Brad Arndt was president, but it got shelved. This year, we're beginning to take steps toward working with the Rochester students and I want to improve on it," he said.

Although Christensen has enough credits to graduate after fall quarter 1985, he said that if he was elected, he would finish out the year. His reasons for running, he said, are because he has a "sincere attempt to help students" and an alternate motive to make the presidential race more interesting.

Mike Ericson

Mike Ericson started off his campaign at exactly 12:01 p.m. the day campaigning could start.

"I was out there putting up signs and talking to people because I take the position seriously and want to help push for student needs," said Ericson.

His list of experience is almost parallel to Christensen's. He has been involved in the Student

Mike Ericson

Senate for two years, is chairman of the Legislative Affairs Committee, member of the Academic Affairs Committee, Student Senate Executive Board, Delegate to the MSUSA delegate assembly, and serves on the student-president meet and discuss team.

Ericson disagreed with Christensen and said experience is important when running for Senate. "This position should not be taken lightly. The Senate deals with thousand-dollar budgets and the president must be knowledgeable or the entire student body will suffer," he said.

However, he said that with experience should be accomplishments. He said his help on the voter registration drive, the legislative lobbying network and the student lobby day are his three major accomplishments.

"The lobby day drew 240 students from around the state—one-third of them were from Winona State," said Ericson. He said his other accomplishments show that he is qualified and able to get things done.

Ericson responded to Christensen's accusation that the polling places are "skewed." Ericson said that polling place in the Smog was a good place for off-campus students because many use it as a study and lunch area.

As for the question of how the Senate is an "elite" group that is not in touch with common students, Ericson said, "Elite is not the right word. The Senate has tried many things to get in touch with the students through the Winonan, posters, radio shows and special advertising of student events."

He said that, if elected, he would do more to get out to the students on and off campus.

He said his experience as a resident assistant, an IRHC representative, intramural sports participant and the mens intercollegiate bowling team are just a few ways he tries to keep in contact with students and participate with the university.

"When I came here I didn't know anyone and I didn't know anything about the university, but I decided that the best way to overcome this was to get involved in the university," said Ericson.

He said he will continue to help the university, if elected, by increasing the visibility of all Senate committees, stop campus apathy, work to increase student-community relations as well as increasing student-legislator relations at the state capitol.

Mike Sir

Mike Sir said comparisons between him and former president Brad Arndt don't stand up. Although Sir has no Senate experience, committee experience or knowledge of parliamentary procedures, he said he is far from being another Arndt.

"I think students should be judged on their own qualities, not compared to other people," said Sir. "I am definitely not another Brad Arndt. He had no common sense. I think I have common sense and can communicate well with the students."

He said he didn't become involved in Senate before because he didn't have much interest. However, he said he learned about Senate from his roommate who covered Senate meetings for the Winonan.

"I can offer Winona State students something because of my being a three-year letterman in basketball, living on and off campus, and generally getting to know people. I've been around students a lot and know their sentiments about the Senate," said Sir.

When asked why he refused to appear at debates, he said it is all part of his strategy of running a "passive campaign."

"There were probably 60 people in the Smog for the debates, a small minority of the student body," said Sir. "Most of those students were student senators and I'd be a fool to debate in front of them. I'd rather campaign some other way."

He said the current Senate is spending too much time with state affairs and "aren't working enough at home" with the campus students.

He said that if he was elected, he would try to build a campus "community atmosphere" that would make people want to stay on campus and be involved in the university.

"I think the Senate is working too much with state issues, which are important, but I think more time should be spent helping the students directly," said Sir.

He said the problem of being an outsider to the Senate won't be too much of a stumbling block because he would try to get to know the Senate members and get a sense of cohesiveness amongst them.

"I think I have a lot of fresh ideas that could help this university and the students," said Sir. "I want the students to get the most out of the university."

Ericson will make best Senate prez

Mike Ericson would make the best president for Student Senate. Kail Christensen comes a close second and Mike Sir is far behind.

A president of the Student Senate must be judged on experience, knowledge, accomplishments and a sincere dedication to the job.

The most important requirement needed for president is experience. This experience can be from either serving on the Senate, serving on a Senate committee (which are open to all students), or coming to Student Senate meetings to gain knowledge of parliamentary procedures.

Both Christensen and Ericson fit this requirement. However, Sir has no knowledge of how the Senate functions, has no Senate experience, has no committee experience and, further, has no knowledge of parliamentary procedures. A person elected president without any of these experience factors would severely impair any chance of the Senate helping students next year.

Sir should be commended for running for the office, but should have gotten involved during his first three years at Winona State instead of going for the head position before he knows what is demanded of the president position. Sir, no doubt, has a sincere wish to help the students, but all his good intentions will be wasted if he doesn't have basic knowledge of how to conduct a Senate meeting.

This leaves Ericson and Christensen. Both have extensive experience with the Senate and both have shown their knowledge of Student Senate functions. Both would do a good job as Senate president.

But what sets Ericson above Christensen is his go-getter attitude. Ericson was out there from the first minute trying to get the students informed on who he was, what he did and what he plans to do. He put up signs, posters and talked to students about how he could help them out. He is running an aggressive campaign.

This aggressiveness is lacking from Christensen. He is running a very passive campaign. It might be from the fact that he has ran two previous aggressive campaigns and lost. It might have taken away his enthusiasm and determination to get the position.

Christensen could also graduate after fall quarter next year—possibly leaving the Senate without a president in mid-stride. Although he said he would stick out the entire year if elected, sometimes students can't turn down a good job offer if one comes along.

Christensen has also said one of his reasons for running is so Ericson doesn't sweep the election. He wants to make the election interesting. Surely, Christensen knows Ericson's experience would have put him in office hands-down over Sir.

Ericson has held many positions in the Senate and has also had many accomplishments such as student lobby day and the legislative network.

Ericson also has the ability to deal with students. His experience outside the Senate—such as being a resident assistant serving on the Inter Residence Hall Council and participating in other aspects in the university—gives him an added edge over Christensen.

He has shown he is a go-getter. He has proven himself as a committee leader and deserves a chance to follow through as Senate president.

Considering this, the Winonan gives its full endorsement to Ericson.

Ericson is best choice

To the Editor:

I have known Mike Ericson for over two years and I am very happy to see him run for president of our Student Senate. In my opinion Mike is the only logical choice.

Ericson is a mover. Some people sit back and complain about the problems we as students face. Erickson tackles those problems head-on. The voter registration drive, legislative network and student lobby day, all spearheaded by Mike, are pure examples of his get-things-done attitude.

Over the past year I have seen Mike working with out administrators and faculty here at Winona State and with our legislators in St. Paul, voicing student concerns. Mike has opened the lines of communications for us.

Hopefully, next year Mike Ericson will be able to use those well-deserved lines of communications to keep getting the job done for us, the students of Winona State University.

Sincerely,
Tim Sweeney

Chair of Student Senate
Public Relations Committee

Senate: a job well done

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to commend a job well done by the 1984-85 Student Senate led by Mary Hermesen, Jim Schmidt and Jeff Krause.

I have nothing but respect and admiration for Hermesen, the current president of the Student Senate. With unlimited intelligence and an ear for listening, she has done an excellent job. She deserves a standing ovation.

Jim Schmidt, vice president, has my deepest respect and also friendship. He works harder than anyone I know for the students of Winona State. Schmidt has recently appointed MSUSA state chairman and will continue his fight for all students.

Jeff Krause, the third member of this outstanding team, has shown brilliance in his position as treasurer and guardian of the Student Activity Fund.

On a final note, I would like to give three candidates my undivided support. Jeff Krause is my first and only choice for treasurer. His years of experience and dedication speak for themselves. He is conservative, but fair. He has run three of the most successful book exchanges in the history of Winona State.

I would also like to support Tom "Flash" Ruesink for vice president. Tom is hard-working, intelligent and committed to student needs and concerns. The students of Winona State would be proud to have him as vice president.

Pete Fedorko is the premier choice for a senior senator position. He is experienced in the realities of Winona State students. Fedorko is a man on lightning wheels. With a quick mind and student oriented ideas as the tools for his trade, he will represent the students with unsurpassed dedication.

Sincerely,
Kail A. Christensen

Ericson for president

To the Editor:

On May 2 the students of Winona State will elect a new leader of their Student Senate. Of the three candidates running for the office, Mike Ericson is the clear choice.

Mike has the experience, enthusiasm, and drive to continue, and to expand on the fine work done by this year's senate. Mike has proven his leadership qualities this year as chair of the Senate Legislative Affairs Committee.

Achievements of this committee include: leading the drive that resulted in 80 percent of the student body registering to vote in the last general election, organizing Winona State's 80 plus member delegation to the student lobby day at the capitol, and establishing Winona State's legislation network to the state capitol.

These and other lobbying achievements echo a common theme, student involvement, this should be the essence of student government. I would encourage everyone to get out and vote and when they do, to vote for Mike Ericson.

Sincerely,
Rik Albers

Ericson deserves votes

To the Editor:

Now it is time to elect someone to continue building the credibility of Student Senate, and to increase the accessibility of the University's resources as well as it's own to the students of Winona State.

In my opinion, that person is Mike Ericson. I have known Mike for about a year, and I can say that he is one of the most dedicated and responsible people that I have ever worked with in three years as a R.A. and Resident Coordinator. As a R.A., Mike is well-liked and respected among his peers and residents of his floor. Mike didn't command this respect, he earned it.

In the same way Mike has worked for and earned the respect necessary to be president of Student Senate. Mike doesn't confront issues with words, he confronts them with actions. Mike was instrumental in developing and making the voter registration drive work. His dedication to helping students and legislators understand and work with each other on problems such as tuition and financial aid resulted in the student lobby day and the legislative lobbying network.

These actions prove that Mike is qualified and capable to handle the responsibility of president. He has been and will continue to communicate the concerns of the students to faculty, legislators, and others who make the final decisions. Hopefully, when I return next year as an alumnus I will see Winona State University and the students benefitting from the leadership of Mike Ericson as Student Senate president.

Sincerely,

Paul M. Mrochinski
Resident Coordinator
Richards, Morey, Conway Halls

Knutson for treasurer

To the Editor:

I would like to urge all students to go out and vote on May 2nd. When you do, I would also like to make a strong recommendation for Tim Knutson for treasurer. Knutson poses many strong qualities which his opposition lacks.

For instance, he has excellent leadership qualities. He has been chosen among many applicants to be chairman for the 1985-86 freshman orientation. That job in itself requires sincere dedication and knowledge how to delegate power.

He also proves responsibility as a night manager at the Student Union. In addition to being held account for the whole building, he will also have the advantage of being closer to the students. What can his opposition say?

And if that isn't even enough, Knutson even had adequate, if not extensive experience as a student senator. Many people argue that officers in the Senate should have experience in the Student Senate. Tim has that experience.

If Knutson had run against his opponent, Jeff Krause last year, he would have taken him to the cleaners. The only thing Krause has going for him is that he holds the treasury position this year. But is that a reason to put him in office next year? No. Why have a man who can do a fair job when you can have Tim Knutson who will be the best job? Vote Knutson!

Sincerely,

Joel P. Reuter
Union Night Manager

Ericson should be the choice

To the Editor:

Committed. That's the best way I can describe Mike Ericson in a single word. But that word just about sums up why the students of Winona State University should elect Mike as their next Student Senate president. I have worked with Mike as a resident assistant this year and he is equalled by few as far as being committed to his job is concerned.

Mike is very concerned about the students at this university and he will do his absolute best to see that our needs are met. He is a qualified candidate who will get things done. Tomorrow, when you go to vote, keep two things in mind. Your needs as a student and Mike Ericson's ability to meet these needs. That should make the choice obvious. Vote Ericson.

Sincerely,

John Paul Schaller
Winonan Sports Editor

Sir should be prez

To the Editor:

Mike Sir should be the president of Winona State's Student Senate. Mike may not have experience with the Senate, but he does have experience with the student body at this university, the experience a good president should have to do his or her job properly.

Mike's a three-year-letterman in basketball, has lived on campus for one year, and has been at Winona State for three years. In that time, he's gotten to know the students here—their concerns, needs and criticisms.

He has experienced living on campus, eating on campus and getting to know on-campus students. He has also experienced living off-campus, not eating in the cafeteria and has gotten to know those who live off-campus.

Mike Sir feels the Senate at Winona State does a good job for the Senate, and not for the students. Mike wants to improve student events and living conditions at Winona State, not his track record or resume. Mike wants to get students involved and give all students, including those off-campus, a voice in what is done at this university.

He doesn't want to simply do something that will make him look good for a job, or make him king of an elite group of senators who don't know what the students of Winona State really want.

Mike Sir is the student for the students at Winona State. Vote for a voice in what affects your life at Winona State, vote for Mike Sir May 2.

Sincerely,

Rob Shinglader

Flash for vice president

To the Editor:

Student Senate elections are almost here, and the decision is all yours. The question is "Who do I vote for in the vice-presidential race?" For me the answer is easy, Tom "Flash" Ruesink.

Tom has been active in the Senate since he first landed as a freshman over eight months ago. Since that time he has excelled in the Senate, being named to a number of leadership roles and important university committees.

He is a quick study, he learns real fast, works well with people, has an open mind, and is a very energetic worker. Probably his best feature is that he is a freshman, that means next year he will be a sophomore and we can still have him as a Senate member for at least two more years!

The Senate works for students, and I want Tom "Flash" Ruesink working as the Student Senate's V.P. Vote for him, you won't regret it.

Sincerely,

Jeff (J.P.) Peterson

Limit the books

To the Editor:

As a Winona State student, I know how hectic tuition time can get. I also know how downright depressing it can become when I go to buy books. Often times, students must purchase two or three books for one class. I think something could be done to decrease the number of required textbooks, which in turn would save many people, especially the student, a lot of money and aggravation.

I decided to check this situation out at the campus bookstore and found that several classes in many departments require up to three texts. One class required students to buy three books, totaling $46.45. Another class also required three books totaling $62.85. Still another totaled $34.70. One class even required five books totaling $40.35.

I think that with the price of books as they are, it is unfair to ask students to purchase so many additional textbooks. If a student were to take the four classes mentioned above in one quarter, he or she would be spending $184.35 on books alone, to be adequately prepared for class.

Most students, including myself, just don't have that kind of money to spend on books.

I also feel that if students have to buy more than one textbook for a class, then both should be used to their full extent.

I also realize that the Winona State faculty is trying to give the students of this university the best possible education. By using different books, we as students are exposed to different opinions and ideas which enhance our own way of thinking. There is also the problem of finding the perfect textbook—the one with all the information.

Students cannot even recuperate some of their "losses" by selling all these books back to either the bookstore or other sales such as that sponsored by the Student Senate.

The bottom line is that students are paying too much for books. If there is no way the class material can be limited to one book, the number of additional texts could be cut back considerably. By working together, faculty and students can combine their energies and produce a satisfactory answer to this problem.

Sincerely,

Christine Pipino

Financial relief may go to dorm dwellers

By MARLENE KARLINSKI
Staff Reporter

All returning female dorm residents will be eligible for a limited number of $100 grants next year if they are willing to triple-up in their dorm rooms.

According to Scott Peak, acting director of housing, Winona State has run short on dorm space for the last few years.

"The objective of this grant program will be to allow 25 more freshman women, from the waiting list, the opportunity to live on the Winona State campus," said Peak.

"This is strictly a volunteer program," said Peak. "Our enrollment looks good and this is one way of handling on-campus housing."

Peak said that in 1979 Winona State was forced to triple-up on rooms, and that according to their contracts they have the ability to still do so.

Peak said that this is an "option" for the upperclass women that are returning next year.

Students who agree to this type of set-up would be eligible for the one-time only $100 grant. The grant would be given at the end of fall quarter.

Peak said that there are some criteria a student must meet to be eligible:

- You must be returning to Winona State residence halls for the 1985-86 academic year and be assigned to a double room.

- Both the student and the roommate must agree to accept a freshman of their choice from the waiting list as a third person in the double room.

- Both residents involved agree to accept the $100 grant at the end of fall quarter. (The grant is not available for winter and spring quarters, although the students have the option to continue the arrangement.)

The funding for the grant program comes through a special fund from the administration.

If all spaces are taken, we're talking about $5,000," said Peak. "But in the long run your benefiting about 25 extra students."

Peak said that at the beginning of the academic year 157 women had to reside in College of Saint Teresa dorms.

because ROTC isn't directly involved with reserves," Fleming said. "It should be directly under it because ROTC membership is simultaneous with reserves."

Fleming also expressed concern about not being given his Miranda right (the right to remain silent, right to an attorney, etc.) when he was handcuffed and taken downtown.

"No Miranda rights need to be given because all he had to do was explain to the court why he didn't do as ordered," said Police Chief Jack Scherer. "He ignored a court order and because we're officers of the court, we have to serve the court."

Fleming appeared in court Monday this week and was released after paying the $30 he still owed for his offense last May.

"He's a slider and he didn't do what he's suppose to do so he wound up in jail," Challeen told the court.

"Due process was not served. All I got in court was a lecture from someone who thinks he's my dad; he's not my dad," Fleming said.

"If I would have known about the court appearance Monday (last week), I could have made it and gotten an extension on my hours," Fleming said.

After his time in jail and his payment of $30, Fleming is through with what happened last May, and plans to pay more attention to his mail.

Open faculty meetings still being pursued

By SUSAN LeTOURNEAU
Staff Reporter

The Inter-Faculty Organization April 23 decided to encourage departments at Winona State to invite students to attend department meetings when curricular decisions are being made.

This decision was reached as a result of a student eviction from a mass communications faculty meeting. The evicted student was Dale Kurschner, news editor of the Winonan and an officer of the Public Relations Student Society of America.

At the meeting, Kurschner was asked by Gary MacDonald, a professor in the mass communication department, if he was attending as a student or a reporter. When Kurschner replied a reporter, MacDonald told him to "get out."

MacDonald stated that it wasn't right to report on something while the right to report on it was still being discussed, while Kurschner stated that his First Amendment rights were being violated.

As a result of the mass communications faculty meeting, Kurschner spoke with President Thomas Stark, asking for something to be done at the administrative level to allow students to attend meetings.

"I believe that a student's presence would insure the cleanliness of what is actually said about others who are in the room, or absent, would insure student's concerns about curriculum are actually addressed, rather than ignored or forgotten about, and would facilitate the academic freedom and great communication between students and faculty-administration this university is so proud to say it has," said Kurschner.

Stark stated that he would acquire the opinion of the attorney general and have Dennis Martin, Winona State's institutional research person, draft a policy for discussion, hopefully to be completed by the end of this school year.

"I'm not opposed to openness, but I think there are circumstances where students should not be allowed in the meetings, such as land sales, contract negotiations, or potential discipline," said Stark.

Student Senate was the originator of the idea to have students attend faculty meetings. The request was made in an effort to get more student involvement in the academic policy making of various departments. "Our objective was for students to be able to express their point of view on curricular matters in a non-voting fashion," said Tom Ruesink, vice-chairman of the Academic Affairs Committee.

Judy Schlavin, President of IFO, said "We should not feel defensive about students who want to put their input in."

But there are two sides of the coin, according to Schlavin. "Some of the faculty feel that the number of years of experience they have with education is enough for them to make decisions about curriculum."

"Then again, it would be beneficial for a student to have input in the meetings because they may not be aware of exactly what a course entails," said Schlavin.

Rochester

a standing committee in Rochester," said Giles Schmid, Rochester Center building director.

"There's a growing awareness over here (Rochester) that student activity money is available," said Schmid.

"Students here didn't know that somebody in Winona could just spend the student fees from here without asking them," Schmid said, pertaining to Senate's proposal earlier this year to use some of Rochester activity fees to pay for the student union debt.

A major concern Hermesen has about the proposal from the Rochester students is a clause they included in their by-laws requesting a position be created for a faculty member to advise the students, and get paid for it from student activity money.

"Do you know what kind of precedence that could create over here (Winona)," said Hermesen.

She said that Schmid would have to talk to the administration about funding the position from the university budget, "not the student activity fee budget."

Senators were also concerned about having a committee in Rochester, rather than a student club or group.

"I'd rather see it like a more traditional club," Hermesen said. "Clubs have their own functions, but if they have problems they can do as they want, they don't need the senate's permission on everything."

She said that if it was a committee, everything the group of students would want to do would have to go through the Senate first.

Either way, the by-laws will create the following three student positions in Rochester:

•The Senator—Who will have to attend each weekly senate meeting in Winona.

•The Editor—Who will maintain a bi-weekly newsletter and maintain minutes.

•The Assistant—Who will assume the responsibilities of the Senator if the position is vacant.

one of his goals as vice-president, Ruesink says he wants to improve the recruiting rate. "We're the lowest in the system as far as ten counties in Winona. We should start taking efforts to combat that," said Ruesink.

Ruesink also wants to keep the legislative network of the Legislative Affairs Committee going next fall and winter. "It's one thing to get contacts with the Legislature during session, but we've got to keep it going."

Ruesink also stated that his top priority would be to have the Student Services Committee work on activities to keep the students here on weekends.

The final candidate for vice-president was John Hemmesch, a junior business major "I feel that my experience over the past three years will help out when it comes to presenting issues and proposing certain projects," said Hemmesch.

Hemmesch stated that his main goals if elected vice-president would be to "have the Senate run efficiently. I plan on coordinating the committees properly in developing proposals and implementing proposals. Proposing isn't enough, you have to continue all the way through," said Hemmesch.

Hemmesch also believes in inviting the students to committee and Senate meetings.

The final candidates were those of president; Kail Christensen, Mike Ericson and Remember to bring your student ID to vote. Results will be announced that evening!

Mike Sir. Sir declined the debate and the other two had four minutes each to talk about themselves.

"We've done a very good job with legislative concerns for the past three years, but it's time Student Senate got back to the students, looking at student concerns and issues," said Kail Christensen.

Christensen stressed his concern over the apathy problem at Winona State. "The president's job is to be visible. He needs to be a catalyst, taking the concerns of the students and doing something about them. The president should be an all-around student and candidate and that's what I propose to be," said Christensen.

The final candidate to speak was Ericson, who stated that his main goal was to "increase the visibility of student senate among the students, and deliver all of senates valuable resources to them."

Ericson also addressed the problem of apathy among the students. "I would like to change the apathetic students image of Winona State by emphasizing programs and activities sponsored by their activity fee," said Ericson.

The debate closed with questions from the audience concerning student activity fees and goals of the candidates.

PALS spread word about WSU

By MARIANNE KNICKREHM
Staff Writer

Everybody needs PALS, and Winona State is no exception.

PALS, or Public Affairs Liaison Students, are a group of about 20 volunteers who help the admissions office in promoting Winona State.

PALS members help with a variety of promotional events from campus tours to call-a-thons to college fairs. The group's main thrust is on providing prospective students with information about Winona State.

PALS is under the direction of Admission Director James Mootz. According to Mootz, the concept behind PALS is not new to higher education, or to Winona State.

"This has been on the drawing board for about eight years," Mootz said, but it has only been into implementation for four years and has only been into full swing for about a year.

"It came to being out of a need to promote the university," Mootz said. He said the feedback the admissions office would get from questionnaires given to prospective students indicated that these students had a desire to have contact with presently-enrolled students before the prospective students decided

This year's writer's conference theme to focus on nature

By KAREN WILLIAMS
Staff Writer

Plans for the third annual Great River Writer's Conference at Winona State University are under way.

This year's director, Orval Lund, has selected "Nature and the Writer" as the topic of the conference, held July 13-20.

Lund, an English professor at Winona State, feels this year's theme is a timely one.

"People are really getting back to nature these days," he said, "I feel nature and literature have a lot in common to offer people."

Lund also feels that the topic leaves a lot of room for imagination of the guest speakers.

"There is such a wide variety to speak on when you look at nature and the writer," he said.

Participants who have given tentative acceptances to participate in the conference include Leo Marx.

Marx, a professor from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will speak on "Nature and Technology in American Literature."

Marx has written a best-selling book, "Machine in the Garden", which deals with modern technology in nature.

Lund said another speaker, Susan Griffin, will speak on "Woman and Nature."

In addition to the speakers from out of town, several members of the Winona State English department have agreed to present lectures or readings.

Sandra Bennett will speak on early settlers in New England and their attitudes toward nature.

"They had a very different idea of nature than we do," said Bennett. "I want to deal with how that idea has changed and evolved, particularly through nature."

David Robinson will speak on Henry David Thoreau's role as a nature writer.

Students wishing to participate can send a $25 deposit to hold a place in the conference to Lund at Winona State University.

Official registration will take place July 15, but Lund says the deposit will assure the students a place.

The conference is worth four undergraduate credits at Winona State, and those wishing to participate solely for the experience can audit the credits.

Lund says he started preparing for this year's conference before last year's even took place.

Lund said he is "totally obsessed" with this conference, since he is doing the organizing by himself.

He said the idea of the conference to be held at Winona State was Emilio DeGrazia's.

DeGrazia, a professor at Winona State, directed last year's conference and co-directed with Lund the year before that.

The first writers' conference was centered on the moral responsibilities of the writer, and last year's was titled "Reflections of Vietnam."

Lund says last year's conference wasn't as well attended as the first one because Vietnam is a subject and place that is still "very fresh" in people's minds.

Lectures and morning sessions will be free and open to the public.

The workshops will be for enrolled students only.

Of Videos

A few weeks ago, MTV announced that it would cut back on its heavy metal programming. Citing drastic ratings declines and negative viewer reaction, MTV will air no more than 24 heavy metal videos a day.

MTV brought video from the new wave clubs and put it on television screens. Exposing music that failed to gain radio airplay worked in the past, so MTV is returning to that strategy. The question of whether or not heavy metal was responsible for the ratings drop still remains to be answered. If it is not, there must be a declining interest in video. Recently, several signs of this have arisen from the artists and the viewers.

Joe Jackson is an artist that has benefitted greatly from MTV exposure. But he refuses to make any videos for his recently "Body and Soul" album. His reasons include "visual robbery." Many artists contest that "visual robbery" takes away the freedom of the viewer to picture for himself what the lyrics of the song convey. The video takes away the imagination.

More negative reaction comes from critical views. MTV is often characterized as the epitome of television as the "idiot box." Most videos consist of a visual assault of rapidly changing scenes of women, destruction, and nonsense—often totally unrelated to the lyrics of the song. People spend hours in front of this video barrage, leading some critics to label MTV as "radio for people with nothing to do."

The underlying problem with video is that there is only one large outlet for the material in most areas. Most promotional videos are geared for MTV airplay. Ted Turner vowed a battle to the death to overcome this monopoly with his own network. But when Senator Jesse Helms and his conservative cronies wanted Ted to run CBS, Turner sold his network—to MTV! In short, there is no one to keep MTV in line.

But obviously, there can be no single problem that has caused MTV's popularity to decline—not even heavy metal.

PALS

whether or not to come to Winona State.

PALS can relate to the high school students more readily than administrators can, Mootz said. They are able to answer questions from a student's point of view, and that's a big help, he said.

Two of the most successful PALS activities this year have been the hometown recruitment plan and the PALS weekend.

Over Christmas break, PALS members and other interested students went to their hometowns and called students who had shown an interest in Winona State. To add incentive the event was turned into a contest. The dorm floor or campus organization whose students contacted the most people would win a pizza party. Fourth floor Lucas won, and a total of over 700 students were contacted, Mootz said.

The two PALS weekends held this year, one in January for Minnesota students, and one in March for out-of-state students, were successful as well, according to Mootz. Some 70 students came to the January PALS weekend, and 35 students came to the March one.

According to PALS member Sharon Pederson, during the PALS weekends, prospective students who have been admitted to Winona State came on a Thursday night and stayed until Saturday. They spend the weekend with students, not necessarily PALS members, who lives in the dorms. The high school students pay a fee of $15 for the weekend to cover food and the dorm stay. Pederson said they get a chance to experience dorm life and also attend some classes. Pederson said PALS provides them with free tickets to plays, basketball games, or other events on campus.

But PALS is not all fun and games. It requires a serious commitment, according to Mootz. Volunteers must be willing to contribute four hours a week, though they rarely need to put that much time in, and they must attend all of the monthly meetings. Mootz said he is very strict on the attendance policy because he wants committed, responsible students. Mootz said if a member misses two of the meetings without being excused, the member will be dropped from PALS.

So why be a PALS?

"I want to get more involved in Winona State," said Becky Winter, a junior. She said she thinks Winona State is a good school, and she likes to tell others that.

Tim McSweeney, a former PALS member who resigned when he earned a student senate post, said he became a PALS member because he had wished he had a college student to shown him around campus before he came to Winona State.

How do they sell Winona State?

According to Pederson, besides being friendly and informative to prospective students, they play up on Winona State's attributes, such as the fact that Winona State is a small school. She said she would tell a prospective student, "You're not just known by your social security number. You're known by your name."

PALS is now taking applications for positions for next year. There will be 24 positions next year, with 12 being saved for new members. Mootz said competition will be stiff. Some 40 students have applied thus far.

Professionalism is designer's forte

By KATHY VOS
Arts Editor

To most people, the opening night of a theater production marks the beginning. Actors, technicians, crew and director finally have the opportunity to perform for an audience what they've worked on for months.

For Kim LaFontaine, the opening is the end.

Because he is a set designer, his job is finished before public viewing can begin. He spends months prior to performances getting to know the play, brainstorming with the director and crew, planning, designing, redesigning, and painting sets for the production. When the curtain goes up, his remaining job is to relax. But it won't be for long.

As instructor and head designer at Winona State, LaFontaine, who is filling in for Jacque Reidelberger while on sabbatical, has recently added the children's play Niccollo and Nicollette to his list of set design accomplishments. The play is currently being shown to school children with public performances May 1-3.

But even with the play underway, LaFontaine won't be relaxing much. When spring quarter concludes, he'll most likely go back to the professional theater world, said LaFontaine.

Already he is artistic director at the Rochester Repertory Theater which he cofounded.

LaFontaine has had a past with a lot of things "opening up."

After receiving his bachelor of arts degree from St. Cloud State University, LaFontaine, a Minneapolis native, moved to California to pursue his masters degree at the University of Southern California. Besides teaching at California State University-Dominguez Hills, LaFontaine worked as designer for the Thousand Oaks Professional Theater and Conservatory and at the John Anson Ford Theatre in Hollywood.

He has done film and television, such as working on Friday the 13th—the Final Chapter, Battle of the Network Stars and several commercials. LaFontaine smiled and said his biggest claim to fame is building the steps for the Michael Jackson Pepsi commercial in which Jackson's hair caught on fire.

In Minnesota, he has headed the design and technical program at Brainerd College and was production manager for four seasons at the Theatre L'Homme Dieu in Alexandria.

Behind his list of experience stands his philosophy: "You've got to get out there (into the professional theater realm) to keep the spirit up."

LaFontaine explained that he liked the academics of the theater, but to keep from getting stale, it's necessary to travel and gain exposure to what's going on elsewhere. And often, that's what LaFontaine stresses when he teaches.

In the fall, LaFontaine taught a class called "Careers in Theater" where he prepared students "to make the transformation from college to the art world." The course covered practical areas including writing resumes and doing auditions. "I believe the class opened the eyes of a lot of majors—making them prepare more and to find weak points and work on them," said LaFontaine.

Relaying practical information and help is what LaFontaine finds rewarding about teaching. "I'm a theater artist first, and what I know, I can give to an academic environment."

LaFontaine is also attracted to the facilities a university environment has to offer. "From a designer's point of view, it's nice to have the equipment to work with." The scene shop is "like having a sandbox to play in," he said. And although not covered with sand, LaFontaine did wear paint-spattered blue jeans for the afternoon's painting session.

When interviewed, LaFontaine was currently working on five sets for the children's play. Technical director Jim Danneker built the scenery and LaFontaine did painting and supervising of technical rehearsals.

LaFontaine said the children's play was essentially fun to do because it demanded the designs to be highly imaginative, rather than having the setting be dictated by the script or author.

Niccollo and Nicollette uses five settings: a toy shop, Magnus the Magician's workshop, the outside of the castle, a castle corridor and a crossroads.

He explained that the object is to relate to the children, "not to make the show appear 'kid-like or condescending.'"

And in the process of creating an imaginative world for children, LaFontaine said he also discovers a new world. "Everytime I do a show, I learn something exciting."

The opening of a show may mean he has finished his duties, but, for LaFontaine, it also signifies the beginning of something new.

Nightmare follows overused formula

Film preview

By JEFF KISH
Staff Writer

In 1978, the movie Halloween garnered widespread applause for its frightful style and ingenious twists on the old horror movie theme. The kudos were well deserved. From that time on, many movies have copied Halloween, or more nearly, followed its formula.

No movie since has bettered it; its descendents are all abhorrently imaginative in one way without being original, including the sequels to Halloween, Friday the 13th and its bastards, and the worst, most depraved of them all, I Spit On Your Grave. There are enough of these rip-offs to comprise a separate sub-genre of the horror movie—the mad slasher movie.

Nightmare is a senseless movie developed from an interesting idea. The editing and camerawork are sharp, and there is lots of blood; certainly, this is a well made movie technically, and its director, Wes Craven, is a proven success (Last House On the Left, The Hills Have Eyes). But the storyline is dumb. The actors are pathetic, and the lines they say are stupid. Nancy: "There's this guy and He's after us in our dreams."; Mother: "But Nancy, that's not just reality."

Other than that, this movie stinks. I've seen enough slasher movies on late night Showtime and HBO to know the formula: the slasher always terrorizes young people; there is always at least one couple who engage in premarital sex and get slashed to bits; there is usually some form of token female nudity; and the ending is always, "Well I think He's dead, but...oh my God."

Slasher movies are moronic and anti-feminist.

Nightmare is all that and more. It is now playing at Cine-4.

Warriors win 8, clinch share of NIC

By WAYNE BOWER
Staff Reporter

It was a good week for Winona State baseball as the Warriors won eight of eight games, clinched a share of the conference championship for the second straight season, had a pitcher throw a no-hitter and set a school record for most wins in a season.

The Warriors started off the week by sweeping a doubleheader from Morris 16-3 and 8-3 on Wednesday.

Jon Wisecup had seven strike outs and the help of a 16-run onslaught in the first game to pick up the victory.

The Warriors sent 14 batters to the plate in the second inning and came away with nine runs in addition to a run in the first to take a 10-0 lead.

The Warriors scored six more in the third highlighted by two-run singles by Tom Squire and Tom Schmit.

Schmit and Squire had four runs-batted-in each.

In the second game, Morris put two runs across the plate in the first inning, but the Warriors came right back with four of their own.

Brian Hellenbrand had a bases loaded single to tie the score, and bases loaded walks to Schmit and Mark Miller made the score 4-2.

The Warriors added three more in the second and one more in the third to make the score 8-2. Morris added one more in the fifth to end the scoring.

Nic Ciola picked up his sixth win of the year.

Northern State College came to town on Friday for a four-game series that would more or less decide the Conference championship.

The Warriors squeezed the first one out 4-3 in a cliff hanger. The game ended with a double-play and the tying run on third.

The Warriors started the scoring off in the bottom of the first when Squire led off the game with a double and then scored following two wild pitches.

The Warriors added two more in the bottom of the third to make the score 3-0.

In the top half of the fourth, Northern pitcher Dan Stier hit a Ted Benson fast ball onto the middle of the football field. It was a two-run homerun and it made the score 3-2.

Winona State added an insurance run in the sixth when Dan Walseth walked and stole second, Brian Hellenbrand then followed with a double to make the score 4-2.

In the seventh, Northern added one more, and with the score 4-3 with one out and runners on first and third relief pitcher Jay Krzmarzick picked up his ninth save of the year when a ground ball was hit sharply to short stop Warren Sbragia, who flipped it to Dean Schulte for the force who then relayed it over to Walseth to complete the double play and the game.

In the second game, Scott Mapes threw a no-hitter as the Warriors won 7-0.

The no-hitter almost ended in the second, but a diving play by Hellenbrand at third base, who then got up and threw the batter out took care of it.

The only runs the Warriors needed came in the bottom of the third when Squire hit a two-run homerun over the left field fence.

The Warriors added three more in the fourth on a RBI double by Sbragia and a two run single by Miller.

The Warriors won the first and second game of Saturday's double header as well, 7-2 and 9-2.

Northern started the scoring off with a run scoring double in the top half of the first inning off Wisecup.

Winona State came right back with six runs in the bottom of the third on only three hits. After the bases were walked loaded Chris Mosson delivered a two-run single for the game winner. Squire followed with a two run single of his own.

The win was Wisecup's eighth of the year.

Ciola picked up his seventh of the year as the Warriors jumped out to an early 7-0 lead before Northern scored a run in the fourth.

After the game Coach Gary

Grob had some comments on his pre-season statement of guarded optimism. "I still have it," Grob said, "The only different is before I had it for the conference season we've done what I expected them to do as far as that goes, now my guarded optimism refers to the post season play."

Warrior women's tennis team blanks Morris in NIC

WSU Anne Tobias prepares for a return in her recent match against St. Thomas. The Warriors won 6-3.

By JOHN PAUL SCHALLER
Sports Editor

The Winona State University women's tennis team boosted its record on Thursday afternoon with a pair of victories over Morris and St. Thomas.

In the first match the Warriors blanked Morris 9-0 in a Northern Sun Conference match.

Karen Israel, Ann Tobias, Kris Schwartz, Laurie Thorton, Mary Schubat and Ruth Swenson were all winners in the singles competition. The Warriors also swept the doubles matches from Morris.

In Thursday's second match the Warriors were again winners as they beat the Tommies 6-3.

Israel, Tobias and Schubat were victorious in the singles matches, while Winona State again swept the doubles matches.

On Friday and Saturday the Warriors competed in the Luther College Invitational. No team scores were available in that meet, but Israel advanced to the semi-finals in the singles competition, only to be defeated 3-6, 0-6 by the No. 2 seed.

In the doubles competition Schubat and Jill Healey fought their way back in the consolation round to make the semi-finals. They were defeated in the semi-finals by Kris Ritland and Sue Peterson of Luther 4-6, 2-6.

On Sunday the Warriors didn't fare as well as they were swept in the singles and doubles matches in a dual meet with Luther College 9-0.

Gorgeous George strikes again

Some people may say that George Steinbrenner is an idiot. And that he is also an overbearing, moneyhungry powermonger looking for excuses for the pathetic organization he calls a baseball team. I tend to agree with them.

Most of you know what I'm talking about. But in case you haven't heard, good ole' George fired Yogie Berra and hired Billy Martin for the fourth time.

That's right. Billy and George are back together again, adding another chapter to the ongoing love-hate relationship that Liz Taylor and Richard Burton would envy.

Georgie is more fickle with his managers than Henry VIII was with his wives. The only difference is that ex-Yankee managers get to keep their heads. It's a good thing too, or the fling between Martin and Steinbrenner would have been over long ago.

I couldn't believe it when I heard the news. I think Steinbrenner just likes to read his name in the newspaper.

Good ole' George has made 12 managerial changes since he took over the Yankees in 1973. That averages out to about a change a year.

That means that the lifespan for a Yankee manager is only about a year. The only things with a lifespan shorter than a Yankee manager is an Olympic javeline catcher and a Cub's pennant drive.

Actually, I don't feel sorry for Yogi. He knew what he was getting into when he took the job so the firing can't be that big of a surprise to him. He can always sit around and think of stupid baseball sayings and write a book if he runs short on cash.

Anyway, I always say, it ain't over til its over, so who knows George may hire Yogi back in a week or two.

Baseball

over the weekend Grob pointed to the pitching as the main reason. "We didn't hit very well, Grob said, "It was the pitching and the defense that won this weekend."

The Warriors won the battle of Winona on Sunday sweeping St. Mary's College 9-5 and 8-7.

The two victories gave the Warriors a new school record of 35 wins in a season.

Despite the two victories, the Warriors actually lost on Sunday. Squire slid into second base in the first inning of the first game and suffered a dislocation to the ring finger of his left hand.

Squire is expected to miss three weeks before being able to come back to action.

"He's the catalyst of the ball club," said Mosson. "Our whole offense revolves around him. The starters are going to have to pick up the slack," added Sbragia.

The Warriors close out their season this week with a double-header at Morris and a four-game series against Bemidji on Friday and Saturday.
